MISCELLANEOUS.

FROM THE AURORA.

Mr. BACHE,

One, interested in knowing, begs leave to ask, thro' the channel of your paper, whether any answer has been given by the Minister of the French Republic to the Secretary of the United States, under date of the 1st inst. couched in the following words; "Whether orders have been actually issued to ships of war or privateers of the French Republic to capture vessels of the United States? And what, if they exist, are the precise terms of these orders."

The delay of twelve or thirteen days to a question of such magnitude and concern to the commercial interest of this country is not easily accounted for: Besides, the nature of the question is by no means equivocal; nor are the terms in which it is conveyed: And, therefore, cannot be supposed difficult to answer.

And if, on the other hand, an answer has been given, that remains bewildered or neglected among a variety of unarranged or unindorsed papers.

One would suppose in that case, that the subject matter of such official, decisive communication, as the one desired by the Secretary of the Minister, would have made an impression sufficient to have given the contents of it to the public, though the original could not be found, lost by accident or otherwise.

The question that now occurs is, where is blame attached, if any; or whether, it is the opinion of Mr. Adet, that his first communication to the secretary is sufficiently decisive, and that the executive directory unequivocally mean and intend to put their decree into effect agreeable to their declaration to the American Minister at Paris of the 28th Aug. the purport of which was—the French ships or privateers should seize American vessels so long as the British continued the same practice.

Hoping a speedy decision of this momentous question I shall decline any further suggestions at present and requesting a publication of the above,

Remain, your
A MERCHANT.

Among the Presentments of the Grand Jury of Chatham County, Georgia, October Term, 1796, is the following.

WE present the usurpation of powers, by the commissioners of the United States, to make rules and regulations for the citizens of this state, during the late treaty of Coleraine: Regulations without exception of persons, which equally affected the commissioners representing this state, within her own limits, and the lowest citizen, which must have tended to lessen this state in the eyes of the Indians, and to prevent the state's succeeding in her object of obtaining the Oconee lands, and which regulations superceded the laws of the land and civil jurisdiction. It appearing that citizens were arrested by military process, instead of constituted authority, which if admitted to be proper at Coleraine, may, as a precedent be also practised on a future occasion in the city of Savannah, or any other part of the state.

We are also of opinion, that the mysterious conduct of the late commissioners of the Union, and the superintendant of the Indian affairs, covered some individual speculating designs, against the interests of this state. On which head we further and particularly present those abominable and iniquitous grants of barren land, have been palmed upon foreigners and northern citizens, the plans of which have been decorated generally with timber not found on them; and most of the pretended tracts sold are not in existence, to the injury of the character of the state, and the honest citizens thereof; nine-tenths of whom, behold the speculation with the utmost abhorrence, considering the measure calculated to injure their reputation and to cheat the unwary, to add to the pelf of a few men, who are void of principle and honor, and who would sacrifice their country and its rights to increase their own property. We are sorry to say, that among those characters, are those high in office in the United States, and two judges thereof, to wit, James Wilson of the supreme court of the United States, and Nathaniel Pendleton, of the district court of the state, together with James Gunn, senator from this state to Congress, have been foremost in influencing the legislature which passed the pretended Yazoo law, bartering the rights of this state, and the most fertile tract in the United States, for a mere song; and which, if it were to be deemed legal, those concerned have sold for ten times as much, which the state, by proper management, might have put into her treasury. We congratulate our fellow citizens, however, on the virtue of the last legislature, which declared the said pretended sale, constitutionally null and void, as well as fraudulent and corrupt, and we hope our fellow citizens at large, will now exhibit their virtue, by sending such men only to the next legislature, as are known to be free from speculation, and will respect our rights by continuing and confirming the annulling law.—It is only by a firmness of conduct in the citizens at large, on this important occasion, that our rights can be respected in Congress, and at home; that this species of gambling can be discountenanced, and speculating sharpers be defeated, which is as much to be desired, on account of morality and our rising generation, as the future repose of society, and the reputation of our growing community.

We further present on this head, the attempt by Alexander Moultrie, and others, to drag this state into the federal court, to answer a suit in equity, under a former pretended Yazoo sale. We abhor both speculations alike, and we recommend to the officers of the state, who may have been served with copies of the bill, filed in the said suit, to make no answer thereto until the meeting of the next legislature, who, we hope, will remonstrate to Congress on this subject. We cannot suppose the state liable to be sued, and in this case we hope she will preserve her dignity, by refusing an answer, particularly in a court where the judges have been guiding the last speculation, and where she can consequently expect no justice. We hope that the amendment to the constitution, so unanimously entered into by Congress, against the suability of a state, will not be leaped over, to answer the vile purposes of the most infamous speculation.

FROM THE NEW-YORK GAZETTE.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Gratitude, disinterestedness, friendship, and affection, are terms which, as applied to governments, have no appropriate or proper understanding—The administration of a government are the mere agents, or trustees of the public interests, and have therefore no more right to commit those interests upon principles of gratitude or affection, than my agent, or trustee, would have to sell my lands to his friend on the same principle for twenty shillings an acre, when another should offer him thirty.—Perhaps in the whole history of nations, there is not one instance of the exercise of the cardinal virtues upon pure and disinterested motives: and therefore, there can scarcely exist a greater solecism in our political opinions, than the pretence that we ought to embark into a War with the French merely on principles of gratitude. Great indeed were their interests in assisting us—Patriotism or Philanthropy were in the back ground of their excitements—or rather they were not on the ground at all.

The late decree of the Directory, for distressing the American commerce, exhibits no novel trait in the human character—It is only another proof of what the testimony of all ages and nations has established, that self-interest is the governing principle of mankind. It may operate however as an instructive monition to Americans; especially that description of them, whose mad devotion to French politics, has led them to sacrifice the reputation of their own country.

This decree is a most barefaced act of tyranny and injustice—It outrages every sentiment of honour, honesty, and good faith. It is a disgrace to republicanism—and will be a subject of triumph to Despots.——The British had good colour, indeed right, to seize enemy's property on board neutral vessels. This has been so sufficiently discussed and proven in the course of various essays, that I shall wave any particular consideration of it. There is even some palliation for the impressment of our seamen, arising from the affinity of our manners, language, and dress—and from another consideration, which I understand from mercantile men is a fact, that one-third, or half of our navigation is conducted by British seamen and officers. I do not mean however to justify all their conduct—They have abused us in many and grievous instances—and had not Negociation taken place, War most unquestionably would.

But the French have on this occasion even made no pretence but that which every high-way robber has, to wit, necessity or want of money—This is the only excuse they have given for a dereliction of their honour and faith, plighted by solemn compact. The latitude which this doctrine embraces has no bounds, and breaks down every barrier against national fraud and villainy. Upon the same pretence of necessity or convenience, in molesting our commerce, and thus thro' our sides annoying their enemy, they may invade the ports of Boston, New-York, and Philadelphia; for there is British property in all these ports—And it would certainly affect the commercial concerns of their enemy—The reasoning is the same, and there is no end to it—The same precisely was done by the French at Leghorn, the city of a neutral and independent state.—The British say your allies have robbed and abused you, because of your impotence—We will also become Robbers for the same reason—They have not taken all, we will fleece you of the residue.

This language may be ungrateful to the ears of Frenchmen and their adherents. But this occasion demands and justifies freedom and plainness.

It is proper that the government of France should be undeceived, with regard to our national character, and disposition with respect to their revolution.—Their real interest requires it—They have been most shockingly hood-winked by these men in America who, without having the reality, have made the greatest professions of friendship; and it is to be feared, that some one in ministerial office has contributed not a little to the delusion.

It is true then that the great body of Americans are friendly in sentiment to the principles of the French revolution. They cannot but wish them, and they do wish them, the most complete triumph over their numerous enemies, so far as it is necessary for the establishment of a republican government, founded upon the just and imprescriptible Rights of Man. But to suppose that we are so far bewildered, as to sacrifice to Prejudice of any kind, the honour of our Government, and the solid interests of the Nation, is 'the baseless fabric of a vision.' And to imagine that we will tamely suffer any foreigner, however distinguished by title or office, to insult our Magistracy, or to exercise the little and infamous intrigues with us, which are practised upon the wretched and illiterate Slaves of Europe, is, if possible, a greater deception. Americans do know the value of a good and well administered government—Experience has convinced them of it—and prosperity has rivetted them to it.—When put to the test, they will rally about the standards of Law and Constitution.—A most powerful and blasting evidence of this was given to the disorganizers upon occasion of the debates in congress on the late treaty with Great Britain:—and signally in the case of the Pennsylvania rebellion.

That insurrections should appear in that heterogenous state, is not surprising, when it is observed that they have had in high offices, and still continue to retain therein, Men, who at the time of that Rebellion, "With Mr. Randolph (the precious confessor) at their head, were BALLANCING to decide on their party! Men, by whom the Republic (of France) could have decided on civil war or peace! Men, pretended PATRIOTS of America, who already have their Prices!*" Well might Mr. Fauchet exclaim—what will be the old age of this government, if it is thus early decrepid!

And yet, fellow citizens, these and their comrades are the false patriots who decry the great and virtuous president, Jay, and Adams. These are the culprits, who through thick and thin, are grasping at the administration of our country—surely the guillotine has not done its duty.

I am very much mistaken if another insurrection, or design to separate the union is not now in agitation, and going on hand in hand with Mr. Jefferson's election—Not that he would have a hand in it—his known caution, would lead him to retire, "in order to avoid making a figure in scenes, which will soon or late be brought to light."†

Mr. Fauchet, who from Mr. Randolph's precious confessions, must have been a pretty good judge, prognosticated, that the detection of the first Pennsylvania rebellion, would only check for a time, a general Explosion which had been prepared ‡.

Who were those desperate and wicked ballancers alluded to by Mr. Fauchet? Mr. Randolph, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Dallas. Who would THE DOLLARS have been for? Mr. Randolph, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Dallas. Who were the pretended Patriots, that already had their prices? Mr. Randolph, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Dallas! Who were "the others was known §" to Mr. Fauchet? Thereby hangs a tale—I leave you to answer—Birds of a feather flock together—Look well to your next President.

These Gentlemen, must cut Mr. Fauchet's throat—not mine—I had nothing to do with the Minister, nor the Confessions—Nor the Dollars—Nor the Flour Merchants.

But let me return:—

The Government of the United States, ought not hereafter, (because they cannot) put confidence in the Government of France—They have proved faithless, not in a verbal contract,—but in the most solemn of all contracts—a treaty betwen independent nations, under hand and seal—We cannot any longer consider a treaty as in existence—For a treaty is binding, or it is not binding—But that which can be broken at the pleasure of a party, cannot be binding—Therefore, there cannot be a treaty.

Fellow Citizens—be on your guard—The great body of you have no conception of the infinity and subtility of the intrigues of European Government—Millions of money, even in this present War, have been expended in bribery and corruption—Read the Histories and Memoirs of the Reigns and times of the Henrys' and Lewis's—You will then have your fears alarmed for your own country—Trust not to names—Republicans are but men—They are as capable of Villainy, for aught I have yet discovered, as other men—Especially European Republicans—for they have not yet worn off the vicious habits contracted in the reign of Despotism.

Be not Frenchmen, nor Englishmen—Either of them in pursuit of their own advantage would drive us all, men, women, and children into the ocean, if they could.

Be Americans—Assume a national pride and character—Form no connections with Foreigners, unless it be commercial—Deprecate the day when you should in madness or folly make treaties of a military nature—Treat them with respect—a respectful distance—Pursue your own interests—but never at the immolation of your national character, for honor—honesty and fulfilment of contract—Create a respectable naval force—The Government of New-York alone, has now unappropriated funds enough, to build, equip, and man, ten ships of the line of one hundred guns each—Fortify strongly all proper Posts—To retain Peace prepare for War—Then will you command, Justice, both from French and Englishmen—when Impotence as you now experience will provoke INJURY, INSULT, and FRAUD.—

FROM THE AURORA.

To relieve in some degree the impatience of the public as to Mr. Adet's last note to our Executive, we promised an outline of its contents. We fulfill the task with as much accuracy as is compatible with the brevity we are obliged to observe and the intricacy of the subject.

The minister of the French republic through the whole of his note speaks as acting under the express orders from the Executive Directory.

After expressing the attachment of his government for the American government he complains in the name of the Directory, of a violation on the part of our Executive of the 17th article of the treaty of 1778.

The first part of that article stipulates, that the French shall be at liberty to bring their prizes into our ports without its being lawful for any of our officers to take cognizance of their validity. In contempt of this stipulation he states that several French prizes brought into our ports have been seized, tried and restored to their original owners, with various degrees of delay, vexation, injustice, and injury.

He complains, that the English were suffered to arm in our ports in various instances, and that the complaints of the agents of the French republic ever proved ineffectual in stopping them. Persons suspected of having assisted in arming French privateers were immediately thrown into prison, while those concerned in arming British vessels were never molested: The Executive in these instances exhibiting an evident partiality for the English, and no regard for the maintenance of their neutrality.

The second stipulation in art. 17th, prohibits all English ships that shall have made French prizes, from entering our ports. Our Executive have in their construction of this stipulation, confined its prohibitory effect to British vessels attempting to come in with their prizes. The minister protests, in the name of the Directory, against the propriety of this construction. He considers it as an attempt to add to, not to explain the article. Even on the supposition that the article is doubted, he insists on the impropriety of an ex parte construction. He cites sundry examples of English ships of war having entered our ports, contrary to this stipulation, having made them convenient stations the better to annoy the French, and having, even contrary to the forced interpretation given to the 17th article by our Executive, brought their prizes into our ports and there refitted them to cruize against the French.

The Minister next adverts to Jay's mission. He states, that France was deceived by the declarations of our executive when that business was set on foot, and that the Directory considers the British treaty as depriving France of all the advantageous stipulation intended to be secured to her by the treaty of 1778; as tending to render the neutrality of America advantageous to England, to the detriment of France.

This treaty abandons the modern law of nations, which even England had sanctioned in 11 treaties, and we in every prior commercial treaty with European nations. It gives the English the facility of obtaining the transportation of naval stores and warlike instruments wheresoever they please under shelter of the American flag, while this facility is denied to France; and thus it changes during the war the respective footing of the belligerent powers with respect to us

The treaty, he further states, cuts off the supplies in provisions which France looked for from this country, by stipulating that the British may in every situation seize our provision vessels bound to the ports of their enemies. In short, he considers it as a breach of our neutrality, unless the French be allowed to partake in the advantages it holds out to Great-Britain. He also claims this participation in pursuance of the 2d article of the treaty of '78, which grants the French all the advantages of commerce and navigation enjoyed by the most favoured nations. And in this point of view the orders to the French vessels of war to treat the American flag in every respect as we shall suffer it to be treated by the English have been issued.

The Minister proceeds to protest in the name and by the orders to the executive directory against the violation of the 17th article. He claims replevy of all seizures, and the annulling of all judicial acts with respect to French prizes, and protests against all opposition to the sale of prizes.

He protests against the violation of the same articles by our admitting into our ports British armed vessels, and against the interpretation put by our executive upon that article.

He declares, that the directory considers our Treaty with Britain as a violation of their treaty with us; and as equivalent to a treaty of alliance with that nation: and, in consequence, orders him to suspend his ministerial functions here.

The Directory declare, that they do not wish this measure to be considered in the light of a rupture, but as mark of their sense of injury, which is to last until they can obtain satisfaction. They reiterate their expressions of friendship for the people notwithstanding the wrongs of the executive.

The Minister concludes by stating, that the French Republic always had at at heart to cultivate harmony by a mutual interchange of good offices; but that our administration have as constantly endeavoured to break asunder the ties which connect the two nations. Early under the Republic, the French colonies were opened to us; the ports of France also on the same footing as to their own vessels. When England violated the neutral flag, France obliged to make use of reprisals, exempted from the measure the Americans; and though forced, for a while, much against their inclination, to withdraw the exemption, they early renewed it.

While France was thus, even during the tempest of a revolution treating the Americans with a marked attention; what asks the note, were the Executive of the United States employed in? They were questioning whether they would acknowledge the republic and receive their ambassador; whether they should consider the treaty, the price of American liberty, as binding; whether the envoys from exiled and rebellious princes should be received; an ambiguous proclamation of neutrality was framed; French privateers were harrassed; England was suffered to sport with our neutrality, and to cut up our commerce to the injury of France; English ships of war were admitted in our ports; * the advances of France for a renewal of the treaty of commerce were eluded under the most frivolous pretexts; while our executive courted the British and solicited a treaty, by which, prostituting our neutrality, we have sacrificed France to her enemies.

And this whilst a review of late events, whilst every object around, still remind us of the tyranny of Britain, and the generous assistance of France. The note concludes by calling on Americans to remember, that if generous minds are alive to injuries, they can forgive; and that the French when they are treated as friends, will still be found faithful friends and generous allies.

* The supplies which France expected in her colonies were cut off: by our virtually acquiescing in the principle, that a declaration from a British commander placed them in a state of blockade.

A reply to Mr. Pickering's answer to the French minister's first note, is given in a note referred to in the course of the above communication. We shall translate it entire for our next.

Returns have been received from the counties of Huntingdon, Bedford, Somerset, Allegheny, Washington, and Franklin, in Pennsylvania, the votes of which, except but in two instances, have run against Mr. Adams, whereby his majority has been reduced to 980. There are three other counties in that state from which no returns have been yet received, viz. Fayette, Green, and Westmoreland.

JOHN HOSKINS STONE has been unanimously re-elected Governor of Maryland.

We hear that James Innis, Esq. has resigned the office of Attorney General,—and that Robert Brooke, Esq. has resigned the office of Governor, and accepted the appointment of Attorney General.
